• Keep TAKE PROFIT and THB12.60 FY20F TP (DCF), 13% downside and c.2% yield. We still expect Home Product Center's earnings to fall YoY throughout 2H20F. While FY21F profit may recover to a 23% growth from a low base of -21% this year, it is likely that the local consumption outlook will remain uncertain, affecting discretionary retail and recurring income. Current valuations may be too demanding, and likely too early to reflect that of next year.

Home Product Center (HMPRO TB)

Pressured By The Slowdown; TAKE PROFIT

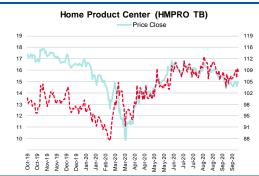

- We expect SSSG of -4% YoY in 3Q20F. Despite post-pandemic pent-up demand, SSSG turned mildly positive in July before slipping into negative territory throughout August and September. Store performance in the upcountry may remain weak compared to Bangkok particularly those in tourism destinations, as travelling activities have yet to materially recover. A slowdown in the high-rise residential property market may also severely affect demand for new home furnishing, which typically accounts for c.20% of Homepro's total sales. Promotional campaigns were carried out to draw customer traffic, but concerns on economic uncertainty could delay spending on discretionary items.
- 3Q20F preview. We expect a Q3 net profit of THB1.31bn (-12% YoY, +39% QoQ). The YoY drop may be due to the impact of the consumption slowdown, sales mix change, and rising interest expenses. The QoQ growth should be on the back of improving physical stores' sales and operating leverage, from 2Q20's bottom. Apart from weak total sales (-3% YoY, +7% QoQ), ongoing rental rate discounts given to tenants at its two retail malls in Bangkok and Hua Hin may also drag recurring income, amid rising competition both locations. GPM may fall by 1.5ppts YoY, affected by intensive promotional campaigns, anticipated lower sales mix of high-margin home line products, increasing low-margin online sales, and flattish contribution from private label merchandise, of c.20%. Efficient opex controls may limit impact of weak sales and GPM, bring the EBIT margin down by 1.1ppts YoY.
- Final quarter remains uncertain. The company had no new outlets in 3Q20F, but will open two new HomePro stores in 4Q20F. As we expect the local consumption slowdown to worsen, the upcoming high season for retail, during the final quarter, may be less lively than last year. The company's Q4 earnings may continue to decline YoY, although it remains the most profitable quarter of the year.
- Still TAKE PROFIT. We revise down FY20F earnings by 6% and FY21F-FY22F marginally by 1%-2% to reflect weaker-than-expected rental income. We expect HomePro's net profit to plunge 21% this year, before turning to a 23% growth in 2021, on a low base. Nonetheless, we think it remains too early to be optimistic about next year's domestic consumption outlook, as the potential impact on discretionary retailers may be more severe than staple retailers. Its current P/E valuation may be too rich, in view of this year's shrinking bottomline.
