- Downgrade to NEUTRAL from Overweight; Top Picks: Global Power Synergy (GPSC). Headwinds – rising fuel costs, the lack of mega projects, keener competition, and the interest rate upcycle – may cap the sector’s earnings growth and share price momentum, until at least 1H22. From 2022 onwards, it should be firmly on a greener transition path, with new technologies in place. As such, investors should hold a long-term view and opt for growth stocks with catalysts specific to them, such as electric vehicles (EV), battery manufacturing, and a digital infrastructure.

- Lofty fuel costs. Rising fuel prices will hamper the margin recovery until at least 1H22, given the time lag. Still, the impact may be partly eased by an upward automatic adjustment mechanism formula (shortened to Ft) rate from Jan 2022 onwards. The Street may cut earnings estimates to factor this in. We also note that the solar-grade polysilicon price has surged YTD, which has dampened the IRR of some projects.
- COVID-19 has led to delays in project bids and construction in many countries. This means there are now no positive catalysts and no new potential growth from greenfield project bids in the short term. We have seen only acquisitions being made for operating projects.
- Keener competition. Given the oversupply situation at home, there should only a few or no mega projects in the medium term. In their overseas projects, Thai power players will also have to compete with highly experienced rivals, including new entrants from the oil & gas sector. As such, we expect to see only a moderate upside in this competitive landscape.
- Start of interest rate upcycle. We believe that interest rates have bottomed. Players with floating-rate loans could suffer in this environment, while those with a high portion of fixed rates should find it difficult to further decrease their funding costs.
- Correlation with US Treasury 10-year (UST10YR) yields. Utility stocks investors usually shun a rise in bond yields. The steeper bond yields become, the lower the present value of DCF-based calculations for power projects. Given our in-house forecast of higher UST10YR yields in 4Q21-2022, sector share prices may be lacklustre – as seen in historical cases. Electricity Generating (EGCO) has strongest negative correlation to yields.

- 2022 and beyond. That said, we remain positive in our longer-term outlook, in view of the green transition providing new growth opportunities. We prefer growth stocks with their specific catalysts, eg GPSC (power and battery businesses), Gulf Energy (GULF TB, NR; power, logistics and digital infrastructures), and Energy Absolute (EA NR; EV and battery businesses). Next year, investors should see a rising environmental stream, new power development plans (PDP) for Thailand and Vietnam, the moderating impact of COVID-19 and earnings growth.

- 4Q21 and 2022 earnings outlook. We expect sector earnings to rebound QoQ on unrealised FX gains, while core profit may drop QoQ on higher fuel costs and seasonal factors – lower demand for utilities, higher SG&A costs, planned maintenance exercises. For 2022, sector earnings should rise YoY, led by GULF, GPSC, EA and Ratch Group. New acquisitions and higher-than-expected Ft rates will be upside risks to earnings and TPs.

Headwinds For 4Q21-1H22F

i. Lofty fuel costs. Given the inflation stemming from a combination of supply and demand factors, we anticipate a rise in gas and coal prices. These could cap the margin recovery until at least 1H22, in view of the lag times of 6-12 months for the oil price (gas), and 2-3 months for the spot price of coal (Figure 1). Still, the impact could be partly mitigated by the Ft rate rising to 0.0139 from -0.1532 THB/kWh (+0.1671 THB/kWh), starting Jan-Apr 2022 (Figures 3-4). We expect the authorities to gradually revise this up further. Still, the change in Ft rate may not totally offset the negative impact. As such, the Street may factor this in and cut sector net profit projections. We also note that the price of solar-grade polysilicon has skyrocketed YTD (Figure 2). This could dampen the IRR of some power projects.

ii. Impact of COVID-19. The pandemic has resulted in delays in project bids and project construction in many countries. This means there are now no positive catalysts and new potential growth from greenfield project bids in the short term. We have seen only deal acquisitions in operating projects, which generate lower returns vs greenfield ones. We also believe that power players will be hunting for new Thailand and Vietnam PDPs in 2022. These should help boost investor sentiment and new opportunities for growth.

iii. Keener competition. Given the limited growth potential at home due to the oversupply situation, there should only be a few or no mega projects for the next 3-5 years, in our view. Still, the EV trend may bring new hope that could buoy and improve the demand for electricity in Thailand in the future. Thai energy companies have to compete with one another, and seek opportunities abroad – particularly in Asia, followed by Europe and the US. Overseas, Thai companies will also have to contend with a robust local competitive landscape and new faces in the industry. As such, we expect to see only a moderate upside from this perspective.

- iv. Start of the interest rate upcycle. We believe interest rates have bottomed, in view of the expectation that the US Federal Reserve will increase the benchmark interest rate from 2H22 onwards. We note that the Bank of Thailand does prefer to make use of other financial measures, instead of cutting rates further. Power companies with floating-rate loans could suffer in this environment, while those with a high portion of borrowings with fixed interest rates would find it challenging to further decrease their funding costs.
- v. Correlation to UST10YR yield. Utility stocks investors usually shun a rise in bond yields. The steeper bond yields get, the more the present value of DCF-based valuation for power projects decrease. Given our in-house forecast of US10YR yields of 1.35-1.70% for 4Q21 and 2.0-2.1% by mid-2022, sector share prices may be dragged – as was the case historically. Within the sector, EGCO has strongest negative correlation to US10YR yields (Figure 7).

What Will Happen In 2022 And Thereafter?

Rising environmental stream. We should see a pick-up in the greener transition around the globe as a lot of countries, governments, and investors have made commitments with a 10-30 year horizon, with regards to the UN Climate Change Conference (COP26) which was held from 31 Oct to 12 Nov. As interest on ESG concerns intensify, the more capital will flow into greener & cleaner technology – especially clean energy, energy efficiency, bioenergy, batteries, and electrification, in our view. These opportunities may bear fruit in the near to medium term. For the longer term, new developments may include carbon capture, carbon trading, and maybe even hydrogen technologies with reasonable prices. Most countries are considering to embark on environmental actions to achieve a zero-carbon society by 2050 (Figure 6). The key discussion now is about how we determine what a fair price of carbon emissions is – this price is currently surging (+c.125%YTD to EUR73.00 per tCO₂e) for European carbon prices.

For Thailand’s power producers, besides boosting positive sentiment on related stocks and sectors, there will be many renewable energy (RE) projects ahead overseas. We also examine the prospects of the five largest Thai power producers’ targets – in terms of their RE portion and FY20 carbon intensity (Figures 8 and 10). Europe is a leader in this area, while the US also has multiple similar opportunities. That said, any potential windfall for Thailand’s power sector would be capped by keener competition from domestic, regional and global players that have a tremendous competitive advantage and stronger track records. Oil and gas (O&G) players – especially European companies – have also shown an active interest in this, eg BP, Royal Dutch Shell, Total and Equinor.

Thailand's PDP for 2021-2040. Currently, the Energy Policy and Planning Office (EPPO) is sharing details of the draft on new capacity over 2021-2030 out of the country's entire PDP plan. It plans to raise the RE portion by 1,000MW, and cut the portion of gas-fired electricity by 700MW from 2021 to 2030. The RE portion would account for 26% of national capacity (vs 23% now). The increase in RE would mainly stem from hydropower (+1,366MW), then wind (+1,230MW), followed by waste (+200MW), and small hydropower plants (+26MW). Thailand still encourages the use of coal-fired power – of which usage remains stable. As such, the country's 10-year additional capacity is expected to rise to 15,643MW (+300MW) in 2030, from 15,343MW in 2021 (Figure 9).

Vietnam's PDP 8 (PDP8, 2021-30). In 2020, Vietnam heavily relied on coal-fired power plants, which generated more than 50% of the country's electricity. In comparison, solar power accounted for c.24%.

According to the PDP8's draft for October, by 2030, coal fuel will continue to play a key role (amounting to 40,469MW) even though its portion in the national supply of electricity is expected to decrease to 28.3-31.2%. Gas-fired power plants will develop to 32,071MW or 21.1-22.3% (from 13% in 2020). Vietnam plans to increase its solar and wind capacity to 18.6GWh (from 16.5GWh) and 18GWh (from 0.6GWh) by 2030. Hydropower plants are expected to make up a smaller portion of c.20% (from 30.3%). With an expected GDP growth rate of 6-8% YoY, Vietnam has to accelerate its capacity to support its economic boom.

We mentioned Vietnam, as several Thai power companies are starting to grab a piece of this pie. Still, opportunities seem to be in conventional energy rather than RE, due to concerns over energy security and cross-region power transmissions. Potential players with strong experience and connections include B.Grimm Power and GULF. Simultaneously, GPSC, Sermsang Power and Gunkul Engineering also have the potential to grow in this area.

Lesser impact of COVID-19. After a glum 2020, overall demand has rebounded sharply, in line with the improvement in consumption and investor confidence following the reopening of the Thai economy as well as its international borders, as well as the ramp-up in inoculation rates. From 2022 onwards, we expect COVID-19 to have a smaller impact on the economy – industrial users (IUs) are on a recovery path and power players have gained more IUs in their portfolios. Meanwhile, some project delays (postponed for 1-2 quarters) should have limited downside risks. This would also have a minor or no impact at all on their IRRs.

Sector earnings to grow YoY next year, led largely by GULF, GPSC, EA, and Ratch. Even though the sector should see full-year contributions from new power plants (that began operating in 2021), there are a few more that are scheduled to commence operations next year. Also, new plant or project acquisitions should boost sector earnings and TPs.

The stocks mentioned below should book above-average earnings growth. Key respective catalysts include:

- i. GULF: the Gulf Sriracha Power Project (GSRC) from 2021, and projects in the pipeline (an expected +60% YoY revenue growth);
- ii. GPSC: Avaada's solar platform (from 3Q21), and projects in the pipeline;
- iii. EA: 1GWh battery plant (from 2022), higher EV-bus sales, and solar productivity;
- iv. RATCH: Paiton project (from 1Q22), and others in the pipeline.

Key downside risks:

- i. Virus mutations;
- ii. New infection containment measures being put in place;
- iii. Cost overruns;
- iv. Negative impact of any changes in FX rates;
- v. The interest rate upcycle.

Preferred picks

We prefer companies that are in their growth stages, and have specific catalysts. These are listed below:

GPSC should record robust growth from its existing power business, and could see growth in its battery segment. PTT's (PTT TB, BUY, TP: THB51.00) power generation flagship company also has ambitions to be a provider of battery solutions. Due to strong support from PTT and being a first-mover in the battery business, it should have a significant headstart over peers. Starting from a 30MWh battery plant, it aims to expand capacity to 1GWh in two years, and to 10GWh by 10 years.

GULF is now an infrastructure company, with diversified revenues from energy, infrastructure, and digital businesses. It has a superior balance of risks (power, industrial, ports, motorways and telco), compared to that of peers. We expect its net profit to grow at an above-average rate. Investors could also expect new acquisitions and synergies, given its strong relationship with partners and extensive track record. In view of these strengths, GULF should trade at a premium to peers.

EA is a proxy stock to the battery and EV industry in Thailand. It is on a transition to an EV-driven business (from a power-driven one). Following the kick-off of its 1GWh battery plant and integrated e-bus plant in 4Q21, growth should mainly come from battery sales as well as that for EV buses and trucks. We believe EV is the megatrend that this company will ride on. Its EV-related business could more than compensate for lower contributions (due to an expiring adder scheme) from its power projects.

Preview of 4Q21 results

Aggregate 4Q21 sector net profit is set to rebound QoQ on unrealised/realised FX gains following the THB appreciation against the USD. Core profit, however, should fall QoQ – mainly on a continued rise in fuel costs (gas and coal prices) and seasonal factors. These, in turn, include the low season for the demand for utilities, a spike in SG&A expenses, planned maintenance exercises for power plants. Still, such negative factors should be partly offset by new IU capacities and operating contributions from some players’ projects such as GULF (GSRC project), B.Grimm Power (new IU capacity), and Ratch (its Riau project).
